composer reinhard keiser 1764â 1739 was admired by his contemporaries and exerted significant influence on them his 1712 passion setting on a text by barthold heinrich brockes 1680â 1747 der fã1 4r die sã1 4nde der welt gemarterte und sterbende jesus was the first passion oratorio to achieve widespread success and from this point the genre flourished in hamburg and beyond this renowned dramatic and above all expressive libretto which keiser set the same year it was published was subsequently set by more than thirteen composers including george frederic handel 1716 georg philipp telemann 1716 johann mattheson 1717 johann friedrich fasch 1723 and gottfried heinrich stã lzel 1725 thus the passion oratorio in the early eighteenth century consisted largely of musical settings of brockesâ s text and was influenced by italian operas it was no longer composed for liturgical purposes instead serving as a kind of theatrical form although interest in the passion oratorio declined by the middle of the eighteenth century and the genre is not often performed today the two most notable exceptions â the surviving passions by j s bach â were in fact influenced by settings of brockesâ s libretto in general and by keiserâ s setting in particular the first chapter of this study consists of a brief summary of keiserâ s life the context of the lutheran liturgy in keiserâ s time the purpose of the chorales in passion and the development of the oratorio passion in the early eighteenth century in the next chapter i discuss brockesâ s text available sources of the piece and the contents of the keiserâ s brockes passion including comparisons with settings by other composers the third chapter suggests performance practices considerations for college level performers and the modern editions of the piece that are currently available
